MAKING HOSPITALS SAFE AGAIN

THE POST ANTIBIOTIC CHALLENGE

In 2013, then-director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Tom Frieden told reporters, “If we’re not careful, we will soon be in a post-antibiotic era.” Today, just four years later, the agency says we’ve arrived. “We say that because pan-resistant bacteria are now here” says Jean Patel, who leads the CDC’s Antibiotic Strategy & Coordination Unit. “Folks are dying simply because there is no antibiotic available to treat their infection, infections that not too long ago were easily treatable.”

“We found that the Altapure ultrasonic room fogging system was effective in eliminating C. difficile spores, MRSA, and vancomycin resistant Enterococcus on carriers placed in multiple sites throughout hospital rooms... The efficacy of the system is supported by the information provided by the hospital system that uses the technology routinely (ie, killing of G. stearothersophilus spores in multiple room locations)”.
